

Douglas Randolph

Douglas joined the Chanticleer team in 1991 as one of the first Horticulturists hired after founder Adolph Rosengarten, Jr. died.

Douglas was hired to help build a great garden but felt underemployed in winter. He suggested purchasing woodworking equipment to create furniture for the garden during the cold season. His first project was a glider (swinging bench) for the Tennis Court Garden. In 1997 he transitioned to solely working as a craftsman and went on to construct some of Chanticleer's finest furniture. Douglas left Chanticleer in 2012 to focus on organic and regenerative farming in Cochranville, Pennsylvania.
